

Glassware / Thu, 24th September 2026 / Lot 1840

LOT 1840

A witches/sorcerer's mirror plate, early 20th century, of oval shape with an outer border of optics, fitted with a clear glass trumpet with trailed detail, height 31cm, a similar girandole mirror plate fitted with a cranberry trailed glass trumpet, a mirror based epergne with a central cranberry posy holder with applied pulled leaf detail above four similar smaller posy holders and two clear glass leaves, raised on a circular mirrored base, total height 29cm, a pair of clear glass lustres hung with prismatic drops, height 26cm, and three other pieces of glass (minor faults).

Estimate: £150 - £200

Condition Report

The mirror plates are both in good condition overall - the reverse of each has been painted at some stage in its life. The moulded glass brackets on each mirror which support the trumpets both have small chips, both of the fitted trumpets are in good condition.

I would suggest the epergne is cobbled together from parts of others as it does not have an equal number of components to give a symmetrical design when assembled. Also, when assembled it remains quite wobbly and you can't get the central collar to tighten. The component pieces of the epergne seem to be in good condition with no significant damage.

The trailed boot has a reduced rim which is also chipped. The cranberry bowl and jug are in good condition.

The main bodies of the pair of lustres are in good condition overall with no repairs and only a few minor chips.

The pendant drops are typically knocked and chipped and one is missing its wire fittings. Some of the other wire fittings are poor replacements resulting in differing lengths.

Created: Fri, 18th September 2026 15:42